

Trade school scholarships

Horch Roofing, Warren, Maine, is generously supporting its community by offering scholarships to graduating high school seniors who will attend a college or trade school in Maine.

“We believe it is important to encourage young men and women to study and seize opportunities for great careers within the trades,” says Peter Horch, owner and president of Horch Roofing. “There are thousands of trade jobs that go unfilled because there are not enough skilled laborers, and those with trades education can get into great careers and earning opportunities quickly.”

For the 2018-19 academic year, Horch Roofing awarded scholarships to two trade school students: Bradley Nystrom was awarded a $1,000 scholarship to study precision machine technology at Central Maine Community College, Auburn; and Jason Reese was awarded $1,000 to study building construction also at Central Maine Community College.

Having attended a trade school before starting his roofing business, Horch understands the career opportunities the specific training can provide and wants to help other students.

“I am honored and humbled Horch Roofing has grown so much I can now ‘pay it forward’ to the community,” Horch says. “I want local young people to feel encouraged in their pursuit of trade careers. These scholarships are just a small way for Horch Roofing to show we support their career goals and future.”

For more information about Horch Roofing’s scholarships, visit horchroofing.com/horch-roofing-trade-school-scholarship. The next deadline to apply is May 1, 2019.

Photo courtesy of Horch Roofing, Warren, Maine.

Horch Roofing, Warren, Maine, offers scholarships to encourage graduating high school seniors to attend local trade schools.